Imagining and Enacting Community Economies

To mark Katherine Gibson's 2012 Antipode RGS-IBG lecture, 'Take Back the Economy, Any Time, Any Place', we're pleased to present a virtual issue of the journal. 'Imagining and Enacting Community Economies' gathers together some of Katherine's, and her colleagues', most important interventions aiming to produce a more inclusive understanding of the economy, highlighting the extent and contribution of alternative economies, theorising economic diversity and building sustainable and socially just noncapitalisms. The issue, we hope, offers a political and intellectual entry point for those interested in taking back work, business, markets, property and investment, and securing economies centred on the wellbeing of people and the planet.

"What if we were to accept that the goal of thinking is not to extend knowledge by confirming what we already know, that the world is a place of domination and oppression? What if instead we thought about openings and strategic possibilities in the cracks?"

(J.K. Gibson-Graham, Diverse Economies: Performative Practices for 'Other Worlds')
